

Abstract

A strategic business method for financial institutions includes the steps of establishing a strategic metric, setting measurable goals using the established strategic metric, communicating the goals effectively, and measuring and reporting progress in reaching the goals. A strategic business tool for financial institutions includes structure for establishing a strategic metric, structure for setting measurable goals using the established strategic metric, structure for communicating the goals effectively, and structure for measuring and reporting progress in reaching the goals.